

My comment is that the FCC should do NOTHING to implement any proposal that would weaken Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections.

The new law has been a godsend to the peace, quiet and quality of life in my household. While loopholes exist for non-profits and the like, the volume of unsolicited phone calls has dropped drastically since the law has gone into effect.

It is VERY important that the FCC NOT do anything that would weaken Indiana's law. However, I would welcome any action that the FCC could take that would strengthen the Indiana Law without making ANY new loopholes in it.
